An idea I'm testing in Flatiron, NoMad and Union Square

Shelfwise is an idea I'm testing: bring sealed snacks and drinks from emerging brands to a handful of offices around Flatiron, NoMad and Union Square, about once a month.

The office would get them free, choose the categories and veto anything, and in return put them on the shelf the day they arrive, send a photo and share a three-question survey with the team.

The brand would pay a fixed fee per office and get a one-page report that keeps every count separate: units delivered, placed and depleted, survey responses, QR scans and code redemptions.

No personal data about employees would be collected, and the survey would be anonymous.

Nothing is for sale yet; I'd value 20 minutes to hear how your pantry or your sampling works today, and whether this would help or get in the way.

Pat Example
(212) 555-0100 · pat@example.com